Fitting In, Standing Out In American high schools, teenagers must navigate complex youth cultures that often prize being “real” while punishing difference. Adults may view such social turbulence as a timeless, ultimately harmless rite of passage, but changes in American society are intensifying this rite and allowing its effects

Fitting In, Standing Out

But pressure to fit in from immature leaders prevents people from standing out. In those organizations, stand out and you're out. Organizations and leaders who demand conformity resemble immature adolescence; they can't stop thinking about themselves. They cry out, “Love me.” Outstanding leaders call people to fit in and stand out. If all you do is fit in, you're mediocre. If all you do is stand out, you're on your own.

It's a competing paradigm that tests our authenticity and takes us further away from who we are with this pressure to be something else. Whether we deny ourselves to fit in or push ourselves to stand out, we're having to be someone else, and that's exhausting. This was certainly true for me, and I tried both!

Why I Chose Authenticity Over Fitting In or Standing Out

How are you planning to simultaneously fit in and stand out during the admissions process? In the competitive application process, simply "fitting in" is not enough - you must distinguish yourself and show that you're more than a number. On the other hand, if all you do is "stand out," the program may have qualms about your ability to do the work or participate constructively in its community and your chosen profession.
